Clark Hill PLC

Washington, DC

John Sheehan is a member at the law firm of Clark Hill PLC in Washington, D.C.

Before joining the private sector in 2004, Mr. Sheehan served as a senior trial attorney for thirteen years at the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) in Washington, D.C. in the Environment and Natural Resources Division.

At DOJ, Mr. Sheehan represented the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in both enforcement and defensive cases on a wide range of environmental issues. He also represented the United States in litigation brought by environmental groups against Department of Defense facilities for alleged violations of environmental laws.

In his last year at DOJ, John was selected to serve as special counsel to the Assistant Attorney General for the Environment and had principle responsibility for a number of high profile environmental policy initiatives.

Mr. Sheehan is a graduate of both Georgetown University and the Georgetown University Law Center.

At Clark Hill, he brings his extensive environmental litigation and federal agency experience to the firm that concentrates on water issues and advises clients on water quality laws, storm water laws, defends against enforcement actions in the courts, and represents clients on these issues before regulatory agencies and in the legislative process.
